“ Ms. Lucille. One of the finest "southern ladies" I've ever known. I remember when I was a little girl, I saw her as "stoic", when I didn't even know that word... As I grew into my teenage years, even my "young mother" years, I was somewhat intimidated by her. She was always finely dressed, even for her yard work. She moved, spoke, and literally lived with a graciousness that is rarely seen in this "day and age". She and her husband were Obion icons, having had the City Drug Store there. She was such a prominent figure, even in our church! As I was blessed to get to know her on a more personal level, I grew to love and respect her as an elder, a mentor, with an intensity that is hard to match. I began to see glimpses of her heart, of HER, and who she really was, when one of her good friends moved to the Etheridge House because of blindness. Mrs. Bea would have me "dial Lucille up" so she could tell her that she needed her because she was "just lonely for her". Within a half an hour, Ms. Lucille would've turned off the stove, or put up her grass clippers, or stored away her vacuum (whatever she was in the middle of), and driven the fifteen miles to come sit cross-legged in the floor at the feet of her friend. With her hands on Ms. Bea's knees, she'd begin with the "remember when's" until they both were giggling like school girls. I witnessed this more than a few times, as well as other acts of devotion to several friends. She was a lady of strong character, integrity, loyalty, faithfulness.... to her family, her friends, her Sunday School sisters, her church... A few years ago, as her own health declined, she moved to the Etheridge House. Never did I see her constitution waver. Her faith remained strong, even as her mind and body faltered. Her dignity remained with her to the end. She leaves remnants to show who she was, how she lived, in the form of daughters, grandchildren, other close and loving family... and, of course, in those of us that she touched with her life that will forever be better people because of her impression on us. I can't think of a Scripture that she lived any more fully than this one:

Titus 2:3-5

3 Likewise, teach the older women to be reverent in the way they live, not to be slanderers or addicted to much wine, but to teach what is good. 4 Then they can urge the younger women to love their husbands and children, 5 to be self-controlled and pure, to be busy at home, to be kind, and to be subject to their husbands, so that no one will malign the word of God.
